Dear Ms Charles

We have just received your kind donation of £1045. I would like to say a huge THANK YOU to everyone at National Foundation for Educational Research.

Cruelty to children is a human tragedy that ruins countless young lives. Few of us can really imagine what is felt by a child who has suffered the pain of abuse. Your support today is helping the NSPCC achieve its vision of building a society where all children are loved, nurtured and kept safe in an environment where they can fulfil their potential.

The NSPCC provides 180 projects and services for children and young people one of which is the Young People's Centres. The Young People's Centres provide a radical new approach to improving the accessibility of services available to young people. The overall aim is to bring about change in the current child protection system and reach out to the significant number of young people who would otherwise not have access to services. Together with the involvement of local and national politicians, they can bring about political change to create a greater awareness of child issues.

"If it hadn't been for the NSPCC I wouldn't be here."
(A child who attended a young People's Centre)

We rely on voluntary donations and fundraisers for 87.5 per cent of our income. Without the generosity of individuals and companies like National Foundation for Educational Research, we would have to close our services within 6 months.

On behalf of everyone at the NSPCC and the children we help, a huge thank you once again for your kind donation and your continued support and commitment to ending cruelty to children.

With very best wishes for the New Year

L. Silk
